Program at a Glance

The current global challenge faced by many nations revolves around the degradation of natural resources. This issue stems from the extensive exploitation of these resources, posing a significant threat to the Earth's sustainability in meeting the needs and well-being of humanity. The repercussions can greatly impact policy-making, development, and governance, particularly in the context of Indonesia. Consequently, it is crucial to engage in discussions, assessments, and problem-solving initiatives to address these concerns. In this program, students will have the opportunity to openly express their understanding of sustainable development and its implications for human survival through the exploration of various case studies. The program is structured into three main courses, namely:

Governance and Development Issues

Public Policy and Governance

Politics in Government Issues
